higher and the market maintained a stendy tone for the first half of the session, some options making fair gains. The talent seems to pay very little attention to showers, beliaving, evidently, that it takes something more than scattered showers to make material change in conditions to justify a general lowering of prices.

Crops in some sections are in a bad way from lack of moisture. Should general rains be delayed much longer they will be too late to do material good, all of which has a tendency to nold the talent in line without unbeing moved rapidly from the interior by good values that are now offered.
